Trip Description

Representative of the wide open wilderness spaces of Arctic Quebec and Labrador, D'Iberville and its millennial glaciers attract mountaineers from around the globe. At 1,652 meters altitude, Mount D'Iberville towers over continental Canada east of the Rockies. We offer you an ascent achieved via the East side, also called Minaret Ridge. This ridge is the easiest access route to the summit. Ascent does not present great technical difficulty, but favourable weather conditions and good mountain climbing skills are recommended to carry out this expedition safely...

The Mount D'Iberville expedition is a challenging and exciting adventure for anyone who enjoys exertion and hiking and who is in excellent physical condition. The proposed trip leaves from Goose Lake located 8 km from the south-east side of the summit. The expedition is normally combined with an exploratory mountain trek along the coast of Labrador, enabling you to encounter Arctic wildlife in the Torngat Mountains National Park with D'Iberville as a backdrop. After conquering the summit and returning to Goose Lake, hike along the shore of Ramah Lake and Bay, where you'll see interesting Arctic tundra vegetation, intriguing archaeological sites and river pools full of Arctic char. If you'd like to further explore the area and conquer other mountaintops, walk along the beach at Ramah Bay up to the Labrador Sea. Then, climb peaks at the ocean's edge and experience the grandeur of the geography, jagged and vertiginous rock ramparts teeming with life, tremendous bird colonies, and majestic icebergs floating in the sea. Next, go north to Nachvak Fjord. From Rowsell Harbour to Quartzite Mountain, climb up to peaks overlooking the North Atlantic and finish off your expedition at amazing Adams Lake at the foot of Mount Dalhousie.
